

Python was our first thought, but because it does not have the ability to use embedded scripting techniques in html pages, importing and exporting functions may be needed which would cause many security problems and also difficulties in implementation. Based on that, our team chose Javascript as the language for our project. It has the ability to produce the same result page on all kinds of browsers, and have various embedded scripting techniques in html that we can use directly.